

Description: This course aims to explore the development of the American novel during the period of High Modernism (roughly from 1909 to 1945), a period that also sees the emergence of an American literature as a recognized and respected entity. At stake will be how American Modernists carve out a space for the novel that negotiates between its developing European counterpart and the historical concerns of Realism, Naturalism, and Romance. We will also explore the relationship between the writers of the Harlem Renaissance and the more mainstream avant-garde of American publishing.

Texts: Anderson, Sherwood. Winesburg, Ohio (Signet: 978-0451529954)
