Prerequisites: Nine semester hours of coursework in English or rhetoric and writing.

Description: What is “Victorian” about the Victorian novel? What does the novel tell us about the way “Victorians” perceived themselves and their place in Britain, the British Empire, and the world? Is there a difference between the nineteenth-century “English” novel and its Scottish and Irish contemporaries? Among many other things, the Victorian novel concerned itself with questions of identity: national and imperial, economic and social, religious and gender. People accustomed to finding their predetermined place in the social order began to see themselves as part of larger groups with common interests: owners and workers, landlords and tenants, men and women, Whigs and Tories. In this class we will test Disraeli’s famous characterization of Victorian Britain as “Two Nations,” one wealthy and complacent, the other dispossessed and menacing, will be a starting point for examining the Victorian novel’s quest to find a stable basis for personal and social identity in the midst of bewildering change.

Requirements & Grading:

Course Requirements:
- Weekly reading. Reading assignments for each class are given in the detailed syllabus below. Please come to class prepared to discuss the readings assigned for that class period.
- Regular participation in class discussions. Although there may be a few short lectures to provide relevant historical or cultural contexts for the reading, class discussion is the primary method of instruction and will be emphasized and encouraged.
- Response Papers. Each student will write a brief (500-word) response essay to be turned in each Friday during the term. The paper must discuss a topic or topic from the week’s reading.
- Exams. There will be three take-home essay exams during the term. Each essay exam will cover two novels.
- Mandatory attendance. Attendance is mandatory. If you must miss a class, please let me know in advance, if possible. You will still be responsible for the reading and getting notes from another student on what you missed.

Grading:
- Essay exams 75% (25% each)
- Weekly response essays and class participation 25%
