Course Description:

A cultural critic Michel de Certeau once reminded us: “A city, no matter how efficiently planned out or how beautiful, is rendered worthless without people.” Studies of cities thus are studies of people, their everyday life, and their stories. In this course, we will study both literary and cultural products about five Chinese cities: Beijing, Hong Kong, Nanjing, Shanghai, and Taipei. We will treat the featured cities not so much as a concrete jungle, but as an object of literary representation and a place of cultural production. By examining the themes such as modernization, migration, globalization, gender, and labor in literature and films about the five cities, we aim to radically rethink certain historical moments and the notion of Chineseness in an increasingly and culturally deterritorialized world.

Grading:

Attendance 10% and Class Participation 20%
Two movie essays (2-3 pages) 30%
Detailed Outline (3 pages) for final project 10%
Final project 20%
Final project presentation 10%

Attendance and Participation

Attend lectures and discussions, actively and consistently engage in dialogues in class and online (discussion board). By dialogues, you are expected to raise questions and respond to questions about the readings from your classmates or the instructor. Note: Two undocumented absences will reduce both your attendance grades to 1/2, three to 1/4, three and more to ZERO. And when you don’t attend the class, there are, logically, no points for participation.

Movie essays: Answer questions about movies watched and discussed in class. See the following for due dates.

Outline: A detailed outline of your project. Explain what your project is and its significance (Due Nov 12).

Final Project (Due 5pm Dec 10)

Possible topics for the final project:

1) Think of yourself as a director asked to make a informational video. Focus on aspects of a city that helps to promote the city. For instance, for Austin, food trailers have a prominent presence.

2) Make a no-more-than-7-minute clip about the “Chinatown” shopping mall in Austin. The clip should introduce your viewers to the different stores in the mall, their locations, what they sell, their history, their cultural significance, etc. Assume the viewers know nothing about this place and will rely on your clip to have a better understanding of the history and the function of the mall. Get to know the mall and bring out a particular focus that might dovetail with themes/issues we have raised throughout the semester. You may also choose to design a website instead of a clip. For examples, see

3) Make an original short film (romantic comedy, thriller, etc.) that takes place in Austin (or a Chinese city).

Presentation

Present the findings of your final project. You may prepare powerpoint slides for your audience. Reading from your report instead of presenting its content will significantly lower your grade.

The instructor does not round up grades. A grade close to the next grade level (i.e. 79.5, 89.6) may be rounded up. This exception can be made if the student consistently and actively contributes to class discussions throughout the semester.
